

Jonathan Rhys-Lewis is a self-employed, preservation and collections management consultant with over 25 years experience. He is a professionally qualified archive conservator, is an accredited member of the UK Institute of Conservation and is listed on the UK Conservation Register. He offers specialist advice on the preservation management of paper-based materials in heritage collections to a wide range of clients in the private and public sectors, across archives, museums and libraries in the UK and Ireland.

He has held office on a variety of professional committees, including executive and special interest positions within the Society of Archivists (now Archives & Records Association) and the Institute of Paper Conservation, and was the chair of the National Council for Conservation-Restoration (1999-2000). He is co-author of the "Benchmarks in Collection Care for Museums, Archives and Libraries" and the Society of Archivists' Best Practice Guideline on Conservation and Preservation Management.

Jonathan has lectured widely on preservation and collections management issues and is Honorary Lecturer delivering the Preservation and Advanced Preservation modules as part of the Diploma/MA in Archive Studies and Records Management at University College London.

His international work has included successful consultancy missions in France, the Netherlands, the Gambia, Uganda, Kenya, Sierra Leone, Macau and Vietnam. Jonathan is also the author of a the leaflet, published by the UK Preservation Advisory Centre and Collections Link - Specifying archive and library storage: <http://www.bl.uk/blpac/pdf/storage.pdf>